The Kirk of Carmyllie is completely surrounded by lairs.

The lairs are on the usual Scottish pattern of the lairs lying on an east-west axis, therefore making the rows run on a north-south axis.

The rows are lettered from west to east, with rows A to M to the north of the Kirk and rows N to Z to the west and south.

The stones in the main churchyard are identified first by CE-, designating Carmyllie Kirkyard, followed by a letter and a two-digit number. The letter denotes the row reading alphabetically from west to east, while the number denotes the stone counting southwards from the top end. Therefore stone CE-J04 is in row J, or the tenth row from the west, and is the fourth stone south from the north end.

There is an extension to the west of the Kirkyard and the rows in it are identified by double letters. The stones are not numbered as this is a working area, and new stones are being added which would make the numbering process invalid. The rows are lettered alphabetically from west to east, with all stones in that row bearing these two letters.
