In the customary manner of Scottish graveyards, the stones are aligned in rows on a north-south axis. They are therefore facing east or west.

The stones are identified by two letters, DB, denoting Dunbarney Parish, followed by double letters, signifying the row, followed by a two-digit number. The row letters read alphabetically from west to east, while the number identifies the stone reading from north to south in the row. Therefore, DB-JJ08 is in the 10th row from the west, and is the 8th stone southwards from the north end.

Double letters are used for row identification to distinguish them from those in the new graveyard which have a single row letter.
