The Church of Inverkeilor is entirely surrounded by the lairs. The church is aligned towards the northeast and the lairs are aligned so that the gravestones also mainly face in northwest or southeast.

The stones are identified first by IR-, denoting Inverkeilor Churchyard, then by a letter or letters, designating the rows, followed by a two-digit number. The letter identifies the particular row reading from southwest to northeast, while the number identifies the stone reading from northwest to southeast in the row. For example, Inverkeilor gravestone IR-J08 is in the tenth row from the southwest, and is the eighth stone southeast from the northwest end of that row.

Rows A to E are between the southwest boundary wall and the church, rows G to N are adjacent to the northwest wall of the church and rows O to Y are next to the southeast side. "Row" F is a burial enclosure for the Bruce-Gardyne family, all the stones therein belonging to the said family. The stones have not been numbered. All double lettered rows are to the northeast of the church.

There is a modern cemetery extension beyond the southeast boundary wall of the graveyard. The cemetery gravestones inscriptions have not been recorded.
